Editorial

Advanced universities providing quality education, research and developing industry linkages, concomitantly, must offer opportunities of physical well-being to its pupil, as well. Both higher education and sports have many important roles to perform in the society. The role of sports ranges from healthy living and community access to world-class excellence. Participation of university students in sports and their remarkable performance provides a snapshot of how sports and higher education are engaging successfully. For many years sports remained purely recreational or merely associated with training of physical education teachers. Keeping a parallel between academic endeavors and sports, BUITEMS emphasizes sports participation and aspiration for highest winning rank amongst students and contributes towards increasing national and international competition. It is an ambition of the University that sports becomes a habit for life for a significant number of students and a regular choice for the majority. The provision of sports and health-fitness related facilities and events are a reflection of this ambition. Sports at BUITEMS embody the concept of Leonardo da Vinci: the body and its abilities are just as vital to intelligence as is the mind; they showcase athletic intelligence alongside academic victories.

The participatory model of academic governance is founded upon consultation, collegiality and broad-based representation. This model has its origins in the historical tradition of a university as a community of scholars and remains of crucial importance in modern knowledge-based HEIs in which ideas need to be continuously scrutinized and re-evaluated by experts, and in which governance is measured according to the extent to which it fosters education and free inquiry.

BUITEMS believes in free and open debate that fosters moral authority within the academic community, and the Boards of Study at the University provide a forum to promote debate and information flow on a wide range of issues affecting research and higher education. BUITEMS is accountable to stakeholders for the relevancy and quality of academic programs. University's academic advisory boards support academic program accountability by providing guidance and feedback and serving as partners in research and community collaborations. For BUITEMS, these advisory collaborations have different emphases and foci for its growth and sustenance.
