Editorial

Higher education relevance and quality is the main forte to prepare students with apt and transferable knowledge, skills and core competencies elemental to their future success. Similarly, a higher education institution must create a high quality learning atmosphere acknowledging and supporting good teaching within a campus.

Higher education curricula, albeit administered and well planned, are often reactive in response to changing needs of indigenous economy, and often at times struggle to preempt careers of tomorrow. Reformation with modernization of Balochistan is dependent on indigenous higher education methodologies for the competence and motivation of students, teachers and researchers, yet knowledge levels have often not kept pace with world academic dynamics, putting further pressure on already strained capacities.

BUIITEMS supports modernizing education methodologies to provide graduates with high-level employable skills, as well as the transferable skills that equip graduates for a fast-changing market. The University also anticipates a strong need for flexible, innovative learning approaches and delivery methods to improve quality and relevance. One key way of achieving this, in line with the HEC policy, is to exploit the transformational benefits of indigenous trainings and workshops and other new academic dissemination to enrich teaching, improve learning experiences and support personalized learning.

Higher education innovation can best be learned through collaboration of two complementary entities despite their own respective knowledge scale. Pakistan-China collaboration in higher education has a significant and admirable timeline. China's commending attention and interest in Pakistan's preferment for expansion, quality improvement, and equity balance in higher education is a manifestation of its planned higher education innovative system and lessons cultured through its advancements. In the spirit of carpe diem, BUIITEMS mandate involves seeking such collaboration for capacity building and performance improvement of our students and faculty. The University garners for professional and technical advice for developing opportunities for research collaboration and student and faculty exchange programs.

In today's age where most knowledge and learning is acquired electronically, value of book fairs and their future role is never the less substantial. Organizing such events at higher education campuses is one of best practices that assist students and faculty likewise to benefit from the multifarious books of focused field of their interest available at their doorstep. Book fairs at BUIITEMS are based on a confluence of psychology, behavior and the academic culture, despite limiting our organization of such events in numbers, is highly compensated for by the enthusiastic love, for our efforts, equally by our students, teachers, and staff. Books in print are increasingly more attractive - especially to digital natives – BUIITEMS youth. They are re-thinking and innovatively developing their own reading models to cope with the new realities of the digital with print world.

Eid Celebrations at SOS Children’s Village

Reported by: Aalishan Karim, Neil Justin

The students of BSBA & MBA who had spent last year’s Eid ul Fitr and Eid ul Adha at SOS Children’s Village joined the children in this year’s celebrations, as well. The students with their teacher Ms. Khalida Durrani visited SOS Children’s Village on July 8 & 14 September, 2016.

The children at the village, like other children on Eid day, wore their new clothes and in particular the girls showed off their mehndi decorated hands. They were excited to see the students who had brought the usual sweet treats, kulfi, falooda and gol gappay stands. The Director SOS Ms. Iffat along with the children thanked the students for arranging all the stands and camel rides in making Eid a joyous occasion for children.

Vice Chancellor BUIITEMS Ahmed Farooq Bazai and senior management at BUIITEMS welcomed faculty and staff members in eid milan gathering arranged for faculty and staff members on July 11, 2016 and September 16, 2016 to share the spirit of the two Eids respectively. The occasion offered a great opportunity for everyone to exchange Eid greetings.
